Course description: The course traces prominent conversations in anthropology and their roots in classical social theory. To do this, the syllabus moves between contemporary and historical theoretical writings, as well as between theoretical and ethnographically oriented texts. Throughout the course we return to certain pivotal questions concerning the practice of anthropology and the conceptualization of culture: What is the relationship of the individual to the social world? How do power and conflict affect the way individuals conceive of their social world and the way anthropologists conceive of the worlds they study? Finally, what is culture and where should anthropologists look to find it?

Course requirements:

1) Seminar facilitation: Throughout the quarter, 2 students will introduce the assigned readings and help facilitate the discussions. Sign-up sheets will be passed out at the first meeting of class. Presentations and class participation account for 20% of the course grade.

2) Reading notes: Reading notes (of approximately one page) are required for a minimum of 15 discussion sections. Reading notes are reflections on the day’s readings: statements of the argument(s), critical commentary, and discussion questions. Notes will be circulated among students at the beginning of class to help focus class discussions. Reading notes account for 10% of the course grade.

3) Writing: Two 7-10 page papers are required on topics related to the readings and to the central questions which weave the readings together. Suggested topics are included in the syllabus; students may also choose their own topics in consultation with the instructor. Papers must be double-spaced and in 12-point font. Each paper accounts for 35% of the course grade.

Due Dates:
Paper I:  Monday, November 6th in class
Paper II: due December 13th in class*

*Note: this paper is due on the last day of class (not on Dean’s Date). If this deadline poses undue hardship for any student, please contact me at least one month ahead of time to make alternative arrangements. Last minute extensions will not be granted except in the case of medical emergencies.
