This seminar will explore recurring themes and problems in American political thought. The course will draw on primary and secondary sources relating to the ideas and actions that have shaped the American conception of freedom, democracy, community, and nationhood. It will consider these works as contributions to political theory, but it will also focus on the relationship between political ideas and political and social events. The course will focus on the period from the colonial era through the Civil War.

Materials:

A course packet will be available for purchase (for those who would prefer a hard copy).

All primary readings will draw from a forthcoming text in American Political Thought and will be made available on Blackboard.

Students will be expected to have access to the readings during seminar discussions, in either electronic or hard copy form.
Requirements:

The requirements for the course include both written and oral components. All students are expected to come to class fully prepared to be active participants. A seminar cannot work unless all of its participants are prepared to make useful contributions, and you will not be able to take full advantage of the seminar if you are not prepared. Participation will be a significant component of your final grade. You will also be expected to give two scheduled oral presentations, which will contribute to part of your participation grade.

One oral presentation may accompany your short paper (5-10 pages) which will examine the issues in a given week’s readings. The bulk of your grade will be determined by a term paper. This research paper (20-25 pages) will focus on a topic of your own choosing, approved by me before October 1. Topics for the research paper should be emailed to me. A hard copy of the paper will be due in a marked box outside the Politics office by 4:00 pm, January 13 (“Dean’s Date”). For the research paper, you will be expected to draw not only on the class materials but also on additional materials that you find outside of class.
